San Diego County's 10 Worst-Funded Pension Plans

The Valley Center Municipal Water District tops the list of San Diego's 10 worst-funded pension plans. The tiny water district's pension fund has just 61.3 percent of the money needed to pay out its retirement promises to current and former employees.

Remaking the Salton Sea

PPIC: The Salton Sea—California's largest lake—faces an environmental crisis. The already-shrinking desert lake will receive less water starting next year, which will accelerate the exposure of toxic dust along its shore, increase its already high salinity, and reduce a food source and habitat for hundreds of bird species that rely on the lake.

Transparency Initiative Shaped Nature of Road-Tax Debate

It's no secret that the state's legislative leadership is less than thrilled about an open-government initiative that California voters passed in the November election, and are doing what they can to undermine its clear intent. Yet, it's a testament to the measure's importance that the Legislature painstakingly followed its dictates as they passed last week a controversial bill to increase gas taxes and vehicle-license fees to fund $52.4 billion in transportation upgrades over the next decade. Had they not followed the timelines detailed in the measure, the transportation bill would be subject to legal challenge.
